

The FCC should not implement any proposal that would lessen Indiana's Telephone Privacy law protections. Indiana's Telephone Privacy law has virtually eliminated the 4- 12 calls per day I used to get from telemarketers - I am actually answering the phone again instead of assuming it's a sales call and letting the answering machine do it. Indiana's law has been very effective and is one of the few things my government has come up with that seems to benefit me directly. Please consider this in your determinations. I am very happy with what has happened here in Indiana with telephone privacy and how it was implemented. You should consider it a model for what you are contemplating.
